

PROJECT REPORT

1 INTRODUCTION

1.1 Overview

The project CO2 Emission provides a complete picture of energy-related greenhouse growth in emissions was not as high as some had originally feared. This project estimates the CO2 emissions from all energy sources and industrial processes, as well as providing information on rise of CO2 emission over years.

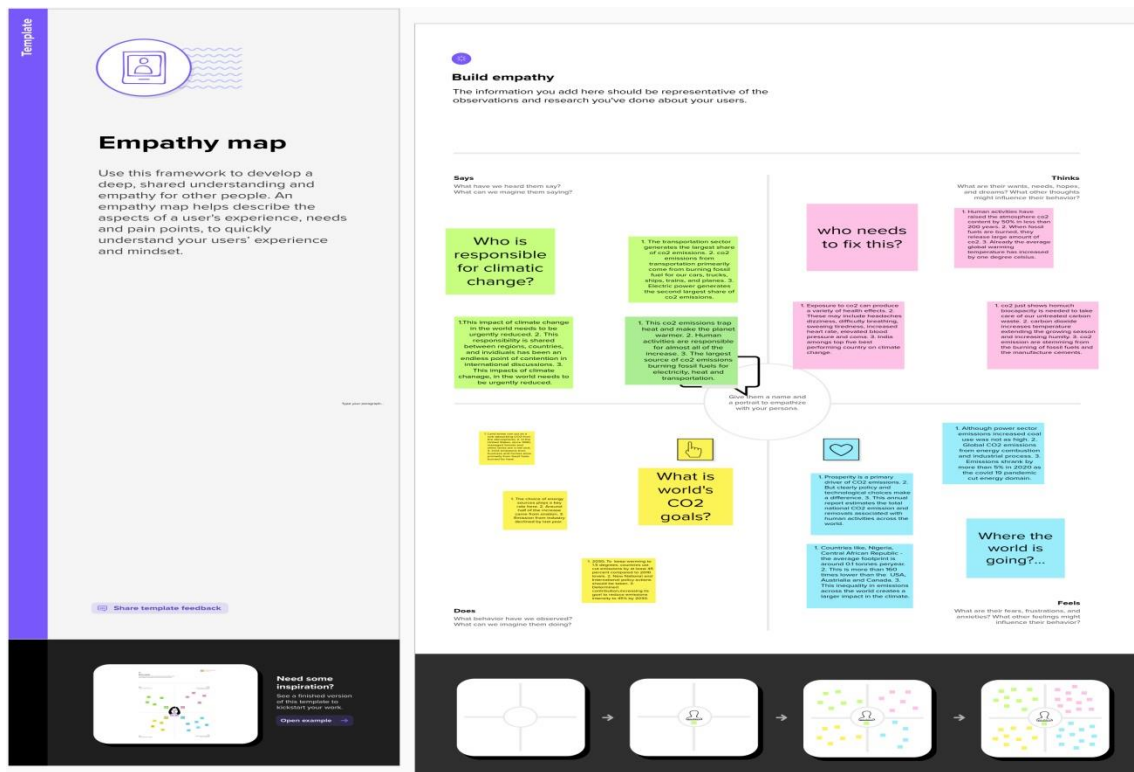

1.2 Purpose

Benefits of conducting a carbon emission analysis may include increased awareness of environmental impact, ability to formulate realistic goals aimed at reducing environmental harm.

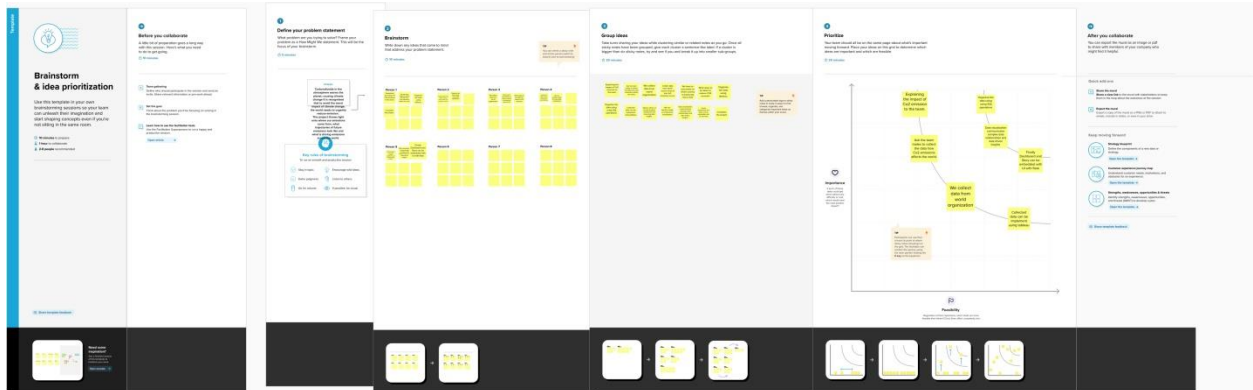

This visualization of CO2 emission helps us to understand the situation of danger. It is urging that a necessary step has to be taken to reduce the CO2 emission worldwide.

4. Advantages & Disadvantages

4.1 Advantages

The report looks at the full range of potential co-benefits from reducing emissions, including reduction in damages from local air pollution, and economy-wide benefits and costs associated with carbon taxation, impacts on competitiveness, green jobs, green innovation, energy efficiency, and dealing with short-lived climate pollutants. Assessing climate models to 2030 also enables us to take a longer-term perspective on the co-benefits from climate change mitigation.

4.2 Disadvantages

Governments have generally focused solely on the financial costs of abating emissions when choosing their climate change mitigation investments. Benefits are downplayed because most countries will enjoy only a small share of the total benefits from dealing with a global pollutant. A wider perspective on benefits, to include avoided local air pollution damages, would make clear that many abatement actions are, in cost–benefit terms, strongly in the country’s interest. Similar conclusions apply for energy efficiency investments. Governments need to rediscover social cost–benefit analysis as a tool to support decision-making.

5. Applications

To Improve understanding and quantification of CO₂ use applications and their emission reduction potential . The future prospects for CO₂ use will largely be determined by policy support. Many CO₂ use technologies will only be competitive with conventional processes where their mitigation potential is recognised in climate policy frameworks or where incentives for lower-carbon products are available.

6. Conclusion

The Global CO₂ Emission shows that there is a increase in Worldwide is alarming. Very necessary step has to be taken. CO₂ can be used to enhance yields of biological processes, such as algae production and crop cultivation in greenhouses. The application of CO₂ with low-temperature heat in industrial greenhouses is the most mature yield-boosting application today, and can increase yields by 25% to 30%.

7. Future Scope

New opportunities to use carbon dioxide (CO₂) in the development of products and services are capturing the attention of governments, industry and the investment community interested in mitigating climate change as well as in other factors, including technology leadership and supporting a circular economy. This analysis considers the near-term market potential for five key categories of CO₂-derived products and services: fuels, chemicals, building materials from minerals, building materials from waste, and CO₂ use to enhance the yields of biological processes. CO₂ use can support climate goals where the application is scalable, uses low-carbon energy and displaces a product with higher life-cycle emissions. Some CO₂-derived products also involve permanent carbon retention, in particular building materials

Global CO2 emissions are expected to decline even more rapidly across the remaining nine months of the year, to reach 30.6 Gt for the 2020, almost 8% lower than in 2019. This would be the lowest level since 2010. Such a reduction would be the largest ever, six times larger than the previous record reduction of 0.4 Gt in 2009 due to the financial crisis and twice as large as the combined total of all previous reductions since the end of World War II.

The stunning declines in energy demand in Q1 2020 resulted in a major drop in global CO2 emissions, surpassing any previous declines. Not only are annual emissions in 2020 set to decline at an unprecedented rate, the decline is set to be almost twice as large as all previous declines since the end of World War II combined.

Global CO2 emissions were over 5% lower in Q1 2020 than in Q1 2019, mainly due to a 8% decline in emissions from coal, 4.5% from oil and 2.3% from natural gas. CO2 emissions fell more than energy demand, as the most carbon-intensive fuels experienced the largest declines in demand during Q1 2020.

CO2 emissions declined the most in the regions that suffered the earliest and largest impacts of COVID-19; China (-8%), the European Union (-8%) and the United States (-9%), with milder weather conditions also making an important contribution to the emissions decline in the United States.
